

SENATOR MORGAN'S SUCCESS.

Saved in a Moment of Despair by a Client.

Senator Morgan attributes his success in life to an accident. When he started out in his native town to practice law he could not get a case and was on the verge of starvation. He decided to go to Texas and grow up with the country, packed his trunk, locked his office door and stepped into the street, where he found himself face to face with a countryman, who was looking at the sign.

"Say, stranger," the farmer asked, "kin you tell me if that's a feller 'bout yeres named Morgan, John Morgan?"

"That is my name, sir," Mr. Morgan replied, pausing in his flight.

"Air you in er hurry, young man?"

"I'm just off to Texas."

"Texas, eh? Can't Texas wait a day or two? I've got a case I want looked after an' I kinder thought you'd do the job."

The prospect of having a case at last was sufficient to cause the young lawyer to turn back and hear what the farmer had to say. It had something to do with the recovery of a piece of land.

"I took it up and won it," said the Senator, in recounting the incident, "and from that day to this have never known what it was to want a dollar."

Valuable Fossil Discoveries.

The New York Natural History Museum authorities, says the New York Tribune, will place on exhibition in a few days the results of their recent discoveries in the Eocene and Miocene beds of Wyoming and in the neighboring States. Professor Fairfield Osborn of Columbia college and paleontological curator of the Natural History Museum, in speaking of the recent discovery of fossil remains of the rhinoceros and other animals that thousands of years ago had a home in America, said:

"Few persons are aware that at one time before the great chains of mountains in the west cut off the warm west winds of the Pacific from the country which is now called the Great Plains, this region was the home of great herds of rhinoceri. They flourished during the whole Eocene and Miocene periods and it is not known whether they were produced or evolved in our own country, or whether they emigrated from Asia or Europe across the Bering straits and down the coast which at one time luxuriated in a tropical climate and vegetation. During the early part of the Miocene period a superb freshwater lake extended all the way from Canada to the Gulf, over the region now occupied by the deserts of North and South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, Western Kansas and the more southern Territories fringing the eastern slopes of the Rocky Mountains.

"Last summer the new Department of Mammalian Paleontology in the American Museum of Natural History sent an expedition into this old lake bottom of South Dakota in charge of Dr. J. L. Wortman, who is one of the most expert fossil collectors of the West. They explored all the steps in the strata from the bottom of the old lake bottom to the top, and brought back a splendid collection, indicating all the stages of the development of life during the vast period of time in which this great Miocene lake existed.

"Some idea of this stretch of time may be gained by the fact that in the bottom beds one great family of the Titanotherium, or giant beasts, went through a whole course of evolution from forms about the size of the modern rhinoceros to those equaling the small modern elephant, at the same time acquiring huge horns upon the fore portion of the skull.

"This is the most complete fossil rhinoceros which has ever been found, for all the bones are present, from the nose to the tip of the tail, with the exception of the left fore limb and some of the ribs. The specimen was discovered by the merest accident by Mr. Peterson, one of the museum party, during an interval in which he left his work upon another fossil, only a very small face of bone being exposed. The animal was discovered in a wall of green sandstone and was taken out in three large blocks, which were carefully cased, and with a great deal of difficulty hauled through the deep canyons and shipped to the museum."

A wooden leg and a dog nearly changed the course of European history. In 1865, just prior to the war between Prussia and Denmark, Bismarck was staying at Biarritz. One morning, accompanied by a huge dog, he was walking along a road which runs along a cliff, protected by a low wall, when he met an old French naval captain with a wooden leg, but powerfully built, and of a quick temper. The dog became unduly attentive to the captain's leg, and the Frenchman struck at the animal with the butt of his fishing-rod. Bismarck used a round German oath, and the sailor followed with nautical emphasis. From words the two came to blows, and in a few minutes Bismarck found that, strong as he was, the Frenchman was lifting him bodily upon the top of the sea-wall. Another moment and he would have been in the sea below, and the whole course of history would have been changed. At the critical moment came help—by the irony of fate—in the shape of an equestrian of Napoleon, who rescued the German from his terrible opponent. If that equestrian could only have known for what he had saved him!

Jack—How are you going to spend the summer? Tom—I'm going to put it in traveling from one summer resort to another, until I find a girl worth a million or two who wants to be loved and married for herself alone.—Truth.

Van Dyke—As the boat left the dock I waved my handkerchief, and then a most curious thing happened. Forney—What was it? Van Dyke—The ocean waved back.—Truth.

M. McINERNY.

Are we to be, or not to be, a part of the Great Republic, seems to be the burning question of the day, and one we had rather leave to wiser heads than ours to solve; and while great statesmen are wrestling with this momentous question, we want to have a little "pov-wow" with you on some other subjects, that concern you as well as ourselves.

Has it not occurred to you that you've been wearing that old hat long enough! In these progressive times if you intend to be "in it," you've got to keep pace with fashion. No matter how otherwise well dressed you may be, unless your hat is the correct thing you bear a shabby appearance.

We have already laid in a stock of the Latest Hats of the coming Spring and Summer styles, in hard felts, soft felts and straws, and including a line of the celebrated "Fidora" Hats, at present all the rage in the United States. There is therefore, no necessity for you to hang on any longer to that old Tile that bears such a strong resemblance to the hat "your father wore."

Believing that business will be better in the near future, we have not hesitated to keep our stock full in all lines. Take collars for instance: We have almost everything you could wish for. If you wear a standing collar, just come in and take a look at our "Narenta" or "Ardonia;" or if you prefer a turn down collar, try the "Winnipeg" or "Goswell;" we have have lots of others, and can't fail to suit you. Cuffs in abundance, links or otherwise.

Neckwear in profusion, scarfs windsors 4-in-hands, and a special lot of "Boys' Bows;" suspenders in great variety, leather and woven ends, good strong, serviceable goods.

We might go on indefinitely, but space is valuable, and to enumerate everything we carry would fill a pretty fair sized Book. If there is anything you want in the men's line, just drop in and see us, and if we can't suit you, we don't believe any one can.

If you should want a pair of nice shoes, let us try a hand at fitting you. Did it ever occur to you

How much a man is like his shoes; For instance, both a soul may lose. Both have been tanned; Both are made tight by Cobblers; Both get left and right; Both need a mate to be complete; And both are made to go on feet.

They both need healing; oft are sold, And both in time will turn to mould. With shoes the last is first; with men The first shall be the last; and when The shoes wear out, they're mended new; When men wear out, they're men dead too.

They both are trod upon, and both Will tread on others' nothing loth. Both have their ties, and both incline. When polished, in the world to shine; And both peg out. Now would you choose To be a man, or be his shoes.
